TOMMY ATKINS

FULL HOUSES AT EACH PRE-SENTATION.

The best opera ever produced here by
by any amateur company.

This very effective and lively opera was presented in the Opera House here on Thursday and Friday evenings of last week, by a strictly amateur company.
The work has been in rehearsal for some weeks, under the able instruction of Mrs.
Burritt, with Miss Ward as pianist. Mr.
Telgman under whose supervision the opera was produced, was present at most of the rehearsals. The Opera House was crowded on each of the two nights named, and to accommodate those not able to attend on those days a further presentation was arranged for on Wednesday evening. On Thursday the company went to Deseronto, and were received by a bumper house, the company being right royally entertained
after the performance.

The first act is a picnic supposed to be held at Davy's Island, in which the whole company appear with Mrs. Shibley's fine dog, "Gecko" in the foreground. A chorus being well rendered entitled "The Red Sun Sinks to Sleep." Leo, a farmer's son, and Wind a country poet, are inspired by Capt Bloodswigger's song "Glory and Victory" and resolve to be soldiers. Leo bids farewell to punkin pie, home and Nellie (his sweetheart) ere his departure for the Royal Military College.

The scene in act II is the Royal Military College, Fort Henry. There are many

Shibley, Misses Florence Henry, B. Pollard, Myrtle Lake, Maude Bruton, Selia Wright, Nora Lake, May Barlett. The two files, with leaders, presented a pretty spectacle, in their red coats and white skirts, while the beating of the drums was in perfect time. This was a "taking" scene, as the girls all looked very "fetching."

The cadets who were in this scene were dressed in strict military costume with rifles and fixed bayonets, and were Messrs.
Shaneman, Kingsford, C. Walters, E. Walters, Prowse, Pellar, Chapman, Clark, Lapum, Cornell, led by F. S. Selwood.

The Zulus were F. Carson, F. Clark, Billinghurst, O. L. Herring, J. E. Herring
A. Chinneck, Kinnear, Hart, Moffat, Ham, led by Wm. Smith.

The idea of presenting this opera to the good people of Napanee and vicinity originated with Mr. Wilkison, and in any other hands might have fallen flat ; but the indomitable energy of this lady in making a success of everything she handles, helped to carry the amateurs along in a rather difficult undertaking. The success and unstinted praise which has been showered upon the production of "Tommy Atkins" in Napanee and Deseronto must be a source of gratification to Mrs.
Wilkison and to Mr. Telgman and the troupe.

"Tommy Atkins" or "Leo," the Royal Cadet.

This brilliant realistic military opera was repeated last Wednesday night and again the Opera House was packed, which is good proof of the drawing quality of Cameron and Telgman's grand work and the splendid musical and dramatic ability of our local talent.

ged on Wednesday evening. On Thurs-

were received by a bumper house, the
company being right royally entertained
after the performance.

The first act is a picnic supposed to be held at Davy's Island, in which the whole
company appear with Mrs. Shibley's fine dog, "Gecko" in the foreground. A chorus being well rendered entitled "The Red Sun Sinks to Sleep." Leo, a farmer's son, and a wild country poet, are inspired by Capt. Bloodswigger's song "Glory and Victory" and resolve to be soldiers. Leo bids farewell to pumpkin pie, home and Nellie (his sweetheart) ere his departure
for the Royal Military College.

The scene in act II is the Royal Military College, Fort Henry. There are many brilliant and effective scenes in this act, including the lady drum corps, the dudes, in their fantastic dresses, the march to the life and drum, by the lady and gentleman cadets, concluding with the grand farewell to the soldiers leaving for South Africa.
In this act the maidens sing a chorus, one of the prettiest musical morsels of the opera.

Act III transports the audience to Zulu land in South Africa. Very stirring scenes occur in this act. There is a dance by the Zulus, accompanied by a weird song, and the battle between the "Rooineks" and the natives. This awakens unbounded enthusiasm and tumultuous applause, and must be seen to be appreciated. The "Boys" were more than delighted with the fight, and the discharge of rifles and glare of the colored fire gave the scene a most realistic effect.

Act IV brings the soldiers home again, with the captured Zulus, who are intruded to the audience. The opera concludes with a grand happy finale.

The hero of the piece is Leo, a royal cadet, and the character was ably presented by Mr. Ernest Hall, whose splendid voice showed to advantage.

The funny men are Wind, a country poet, (Mr. D. L. Hill), and Captain Bloodswigger (Mr. W. J. Normile). These gentlemen also appear as French and German professors and their make up and action was deserving of the applause their endeavors drew from an appreciative audience. "Natural born actors" was the unanimous comment.

Gaspard, a man of the world, (Mr. F. S.
Selwood) appears to great advantage in the opening scene, and sings a couple of songs which were received with well merited favor.

Bellows, a lover of Caroline (Mr. G.
Bustin) sustained the funny part of his character splendidly, as much by his clever acting as by his good voice.

Andy, a cosmopolitan (Mr. F. H.
Carson) fills in nicely and sings well.

Quip, a landlord (Mr. O. L. Herring) a boniface pure and simple, with a neverforgettable make-up, adds to the effect greatly of the first scene.

Chawles, king of the dudes, (Mr. A.

The Prime Minister's Coup.

The autumn morning was gray and misty in Parliament Street.

Big Ben, looming up against the leaden sky, had chimed nine o'clock, business men were hurrying toward Charing Cross, eager to commence the day's work, the police about Whitehall were going off duty and hastening to warm their elves, and the sentinels at the Horse Guard were changing guard. The great blocks of Government Offices were not yet open, even fourth division clerks were not due for another hour and their principals not for a couple of hours more, yet the Most Noble the Marquis of Macclesfield, her Majesty's Prime Minister and Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, was in his private room overlooking the great quadrangle in Downing Street, busy with the affairs of the British empire.

He had entered that room soon after midnight, taken the broad ribbon of the Garter from across his shirt-front—for he had been attending a reception at the German Embassy—placed it carefully in a drawer, turned up his shirt-cuffs as was his habit, and sat down to write. Heedless of time, he had written on, the silence broken only by the scratching of his quill, rising only once to drink a glass of water and to pace the room two or three times about in deep thought. Then, he had returned to his work, penning a dispatch with his own hand and reducing it to cipher of figures by aid of the small leather-bound book open at his elbow.

A glassy, gray-bearded, scanty-haired man, he possessed keen dark eyes which had not lost their brilliancy although he was nearly seventy. Something of a misanthrope in private life, a retiring man who hated popularity, who never spoke in public unless absolutely compelled from political motives, he was nevertheless acknowledged from end to end of Europe as the greatest living diplomatist and the most successful Foreign Minister England had ever possessed. To preserve the old tradition of his ancient and noble family, and serve his sovereign, were his only aims, and to that end it was no unusual thing for him to work through the silent hours while London slept, and then drive in a hansom to his great dismal old house in Grosvenor Square, where he lived a lonely and essentially simple life. Twenty years ago his wife had died, and beyond the servants, his nephew, who acted as his private secretary, was the only other resident in that severely furnished barrack. A prodigious worker, he would frequently be busy for twenty hours out of the twenty-four, examining and mastering the dispatches which came to him daily from her Majesty's Ambassadors abroad, sealed in those well-worn boxes of red morocco, making notes, deciding the most difficult points of an intricate diplomacy, and giving advice to one and all of her representatives, at the various courts of Europe. Five thousand pounds per year was certainly an inadequate remuneration for his onerous office. No man in all England had such grave responsibility, for often upon those words he wrote depended the integrity and prosperity of the great empire.

As Big Ben boomed forth, he glanced at his watch. Then, having written another line, he appended his well-known sprawling signature, collected the written sheets of blue dispatch-paper with its wide margin and its word, "Confidential," printed in the corner, and having taken from a drawer an envelope upon which was a large, broad cross in scarlet, he sealed it with the old-fashioned cut amethyst attached to his watch-chain and bearing his arms.

Then he sighed heavily, rested his weary brow upon his hands, and you to keep your eyes always open."

Macdonald smiled. "We are too clever for those interesting persons," he laughed. "The spy is more successful in France, or in Italy, for there he can bribe. The cleverest spy has never touched a crossed dispatch of your lordship's." "And that is a credit to your corps. In no other messenger service in Europe could that be said. It is true, as Bismarck once remarked to me, only the English are honest. But you're losing time," added his lordship, hastily. "Go. And good luck to you on your journey."

The captain, with the dispatch in his pocket, strode out, closing the door, and the great Minister was once more alone.

At half-past eight that same evening Macdonald sat in the small buffet at the Gare de Lyon in Paris, where he was well known, calmly eating his dinner. He dined there, perhaps, on an average once a week throughout the year, and Jean, the head-waiter, always advised him as to his dishes. That night he had eaten exceedingly well, and now idled over coffee, a green chartreuse and a good cigar, awaiting the departure of the Rome express. He had wired from Charing Cross securing his berth in the wagon-lit, and as he made it a rule never to join a train until it was on the point of departure he took matters very easily, chatting and joking with the manager of the buffet.

At last the clock struck nine, the bustle and excitement on the platform where the Italian train was being put in increased, and a ticket-collector began calling passengers for Laroche, Macdon, Dixon, Aix-les-Bains and Modane to take their places, whereupon the Queen's messenger paid his bill tardily and strolled in a leisurely manner to the sleeping-car.

The conductor touched his hat respectfully as he entered, and said, "I have given m'sieur the center salon, as usual."

"Number Six?"

"Yes, m'sieur."

The conductor, Bonnaud, had been known to him for years. He had traveled hundreds of journeys with him and the Nord, the Orient and the Nice expresses, and this official of the International Sleeping Car Company knew all his likes and dislikes. The car that night was pretty full, for a party of Americans was going through to Rome. Ere he had placed his bag in his berth, however, the horn was blown, and the train moved off on its long journey to the south of Europe.

For an hour, as was his habit, the captain sat in the corridor of the car, smoking, sipping the whisky and soda which Bonnaud brought him, chatting with one or two of his fellow-travelers, and making himself just as much at ease as though he were in his own chambers in St. James's Street. Indeed, spending nearly half his life in those cars, he was absolutely at home in them.

He was the last to turn in, and when the train ran onto Amberieu at a quarter past five next morning, although it was still dark, descended and obtained, two long glasses of cafe-au-lait, one for the captain and one for himself. He took one to the door of Berth Number Six and knocked. He heard a response inside, and announced, "Cafe, m'sieur!" Then, setting the glass on the floor before the door, he was compelled to descend again to the platform to speak with the controller of the train. The instant, however, Bonnaud had left the car, the door of the compartment next Macdonald's opened noiselessly, and a man's hand reached round and dropped a tiny white tablet into the steaming coffee.

A second later the door closed, and he still kept a silent, patient watch through the gimlet-hole, until at the half-hour he turned to the woman, telling her to prepare all the things, adding:

"He's as sound asleep as though he were in his coffin; and," he added grimly, with a strange glitter in his small eyes, "he'll go there, if he moves."

THE BROTHERS OF THE WOLF

My position was indeed desperate. I had heard sufficient of their inhuman treatment of those who refused to pay ransom, to know that I, having failed to outwit them, might now be murdered without the slightest compunction. By that ill-advised note I had foolishly shown myself their enemy.

"You have seen that open grave beyond," the notorious outlaw said in a hard voice. "It is prepared for you! You will pay, or you will not leave this place alive!"

"Enough!" I cried, springing suddenly upon him. "Take that!" and drawing my revolver, which still remained in my pocket, apparently overlooked by them when I was unconscious, I fired point-blank in his face. "And that!"

He sprang back with a startled cry, evidently amazed that I had a weapon. A third shot I directed at his companion; and ere the flash had died away I had dashed through the door and up a short flight of broken steps into the light of day.

I emerged amid the ruins of the great old castle; but, running to the rampart, I sprang over it, and found myself outside the village, with the path by which I had ascended deep down before me.

Away I dashed for life. Behind me sounded wild shouts and vehement curses; and as I ran rifles cracked behind me, and several bullets whistled unpleasantly about my ears. The hasty footsteps of my pursuers gradually gained upon me, and I knew that it would be useless to make any stand against them. Therefore, heedless of where I went, and urged to take terrible leaps by a courage begotten of a strong desire for life, I sped on; down, down the mountain-side, until I reached the broken bridge and the highroad, where I found that, having successfully leaped several places where my pursuers feared to follow, I had once more gained considerably upon them. Those wild leaps saved me.

Again my pursuers fired at me, but their bullets went wide.

The Ave Maria was ringing when, having joined my anxious driver, who was waiting for me at the hamlet, I drove into Ponte e Serraglio; and it was past midnight when our wheels rattled over the uneven pebbles of gray old Lucca.

Next morning I told my story to the Questore, or chief of police, and then went my way, full of vivid recollections of my exciting adventure.

Since then, during the past year, the daring robberies and outrages committed by the Brothers of the Wolf have been innumerable. A paragraph which I, however, read some six weeks ago in the Tribuna caused me considerable satisfaction. The cutting, now before me as I write, translated, states that a strong force of Carabinieri secretly ascended to the village of Monte Lupo by night, and succeeded in surprising the outlaws. A fierce encounter ensued, during which the guards succeeded in shooting the ringleader Conti and four of his companions. Some twenty prisoners were taken, all of whom were recognized as desperate thieves, including the Syndic, who

AN ENGLISH BOY HERO.

While a boy bugler in English Fifth Lancers has been rewarded for his pluck at the battle of El Laagte, there is one boy whose name in England's Crimean War made a name that has lasted even to day.

This boy, whose name was Th Keep, went with the English army to the heights of Alma, preserving most undaunted demeanor through the battle. Shot and shelled about him like hail; but, notwithstanding the weariness of the present dangers or the horridness of the boy's heart beat with tenderness toward the wounded. Instead of going into a tent to take care of himself after the battle, he was venturing his life for the good comrades stepping carefully over a body after another, collecting all broken muskets he could find, making a fire in the night to cure hot water. He made the sufferers, and saved the life of Sergeant and several of the privates who were lying nearly exhausted from want. At Balaklava again, he assisted the wounded in his duty by day and worked the trenches by night, taking but little rest. At Inkerman he was wounded by Russians about 20 times, and, to use his own words, "thought it was all over with me." He received one shot, which passed through his coat and out at the back of his trousers, but he was unhurt, helped, with all the bravery of a soldier, to get in the wounded. He waited the doctor when extracting the bullet from the men, and on the morrow and after. Some of the wounded say they would not have alive now had it not been for the boy's unwearied watchfulness and kindness in their hours of helplessness.

STEVENSON AND CHILDREN

Edmund Gosse, an English writer, has a charming paper on Robert Louis Stevenson in his relation to children in a recent number of Youth's Companion. Mr. Gosse is an especial admirer of "A Child's Garden of Verse," and has this about it: "The little poem contained in the volume."

Everyone recollects and delights in "The Land of Counterpane," which begins:

When I was sick and lay abed, I had two pillows at my head, And all my tops beside me lay. To keep me happy all the day.

All this, we may say, is the imaginative experience of a sick child; but the very close of Stevenson's life was accustomed to make up adventures as he lay in bed very still, hidden to speak or move, prone

England had such grave responsibility for, often upon those words he wrote depended the integrity and prosperity of the great empire.

As Big Ben boomed forth, he glanced at his watch. Then, having written another line, he appended his well-known sprightly signature, collected the written sheets of blue dispatch-paper with its wide margin and its word, "Confidential," printed in the corner, and having taken from a drawer an envelope upon which was a large, broad cross in scarlet, he sealed it with the old-fashioned cut amethyst attached to his watch-chain and bearing his arms.

Then he sighed heavily, rested his wearied brow upon his hands, and afterward rose, drew up the blind and stood at the window, gazing gravely out upon the silent quadrangle of the Foreign Office where the pigeons were strutting in the gray morning.

"It must be done—must!" he murmured. "It is a sacrifice—a great sacrifice—but it is imperative. At this moment we are within twenty-four hours of war, and the honor of England is in my hands."

He took from his pocket a telegram which he had received over the private wire on the previous night, and reread it. The words in cipher for his eyes alone were from his Sovereign Lady the Queen.

Thrice he paced the room from end to end, his chin upon his breast, his thin, nervous fingers twitching in agitation, murmuring:

"I wonder how it will all end? Ah! I wonder!"

And he halted, drawing a long breath. There was upon his ashen face a look of profound alarm.

A sharp tap upon the door caused him to start, and there entered a tall, smart-looking man of about forty, wearing a heavy travelling-ulster, whose gait showed him to be an officer and whose easy bearing made it plain that he was on intimate terms with the Premier of England. His friendly feeling toward the personnel of the Foreign Office was one of the secrets of the Marquis of Macclesfield's success. He was a man of few words, even to the Permanent Under-Secretaries, but he was accessible to all, of whatever grade.

The man who had entered was a well-set-up, fair-mustached, good-looking fellow, who had come in response to an order of his chief which had reached him late at night. He was Capt. Lionel Macdonald, one of the Greyhounds of Europe, or to be more explicit, one of her Majesty's Foreign Service Messengers, a man to whom a journey from London to St. Petersburg was about as fatiguing as a journey around the Inner Circle of the Metropolitan District Railway. He spent his life on railways, and had the times of departure and arrival on the European trunk-lines committed to memory so that he had no use for a Continental Bradshaw.

"Ah! Macdonald," his lordship exclaimed as the man entered, "I'm glad it's your turn to carry dispatches. I want you to go to Rome without delay. When shall you arrive?"

"If I leave Charing Cross in half an hour's time," said the Queen's messenger, glancing at his watch, "I shall be in Rome at seven o'clock in the morning of the day after to-morrow."

"Good," grunted the Minister for Foreign Affairs, handing him the sealed dispatch. "Give this into Sir Charles Durrant's hands at the earliest possible moment—and," he added, "re-Your duties I admit are extremely confidential. If its contents were known, all our diplomacy would be thwarted—you understand."

"Exactly," replied the captain, taking the document. "I trust however, that my previous services have shown my trustworthiness."

"Of course, of course," the chief said, quickly. "In you, Captain Macdonald, the Queen has a faithful servant. Important at this crisis," the Minister added. "You are carrying backward and forward across Europe secrets which might land us in war, or estrange us from every possible alliance. With unscrupulous spies about you, as you have on every hand, it behooves though it was still dark, descended and obtained, two long glasses of cafe-au-lait, one for the captain and one for himself. He took one to the door of Berth Number Six and knocked. He heard a response inside, and announced, "Cafe, monsieur!" Then, setting the glass on the floor before the door, he was compelled to descend again to the platform to speak with the controller of the train. The instant, however, Bonnaud had left the car, the door of the compartment next Macdonald's opened noiselessly, and a man's hand reached round and dropped a tiny white tabloid into the steaming coffee.

A second later the door closed, and the only sound was the captain stirring. Next moment he unbolted his door and took in the glass.

The scene in the adjoining compartment was meanwhile, a somewhat curious one. The little chamber, like Macdonald's, contained two berths, and was separated from his by a closed door, so arranged that the two compartments could be thrown into one at will. Its occupants were a tall, dark-bearded, gentlemanly man, and a good-looking woman, attired quietly in a dark-green traveling-dress with a little satchel at her waist in that manner affected by Frenchwomen when traveling. In the corridor on the previous night Macdonald had spoken with them, and found that they were Parisians, husband and wife, and a very pleasant pair.

It was plain, however, that neither had slept. They conversed only in low whispers, and the man, whom she addressed as Grezat, stood with his eye to a small gimlet-hole in the paneling.

"Good!" he whispered at last in French. "He's drunk the lot, and he hasn't relocked the door. The thing is quite easy now." Then, lifting the blind, he looked out. "How infernally dark it is. We ought to wait, I suppose, for the light."

"But delay may upset everything," observed his companion.

"I've given him sufficient," the man said, grimly. "He won't trouble us. Only I wish it would get light soon."

"I hope you haven't given him an overdose," the woman said, apprehensively. "If anything happened, there might be some very awkward inquiries."

"Bah!" the man laughed, as the train, increasing its speed, roared on, the wheels grunting louder beneath them until conversation in whispers became almost impossible. "I'm not a bungler. Leave it to me, if you're afraid to help."

"Afraid?" the woman echoed, with a curl of the lip. "Was I afraid when we put that German hog out of the way at Perpignan? Did I not assist you when we traveled from Paris to Salzburg, and next day the newspapers were full of a 'mystery'? Mysteries I don't like. We want no 'mystery' this time. Recollect the narrow escape we've already had."

"Enough," cried the man, impatiently, his eye again at the tiny hole. "Stop your chatter. He's going to sleep."

The woman remained silent, sitting on the edge of the sleeping-berth. Her hat was off, her dark hair disheveled, for she had reclined wide awake during the long night, and she looked pale and tired in the flickering lamplight.

For fully half an hour the man Grezat kept watch at the hole until satisfied that the Englishman slept, he opened his door carefully and looked down the corridor. Bonnaud was again asleep. Then he crept to Macdonald's door, opened it noiselessly, and reaching across drew back the bolt which secured the door in the partition between the two compartments, leaving next instant, and returning to his companion.

"It's all right," he said. Then, glancing at his watch, he saw that it wanted a quarter to six. "In another quarter of an hour we must act, daylight or no daylight."

The minutes slowly went by, and daring robberies and outrages committed by the Brothers of the Wolf have been innumerable. A paragraph which I, however, read some six weeks ago in the Tribuna caused me considerable satisfaction. The cutting, now before me as I write, translated, states that a strong force of Carbineers secretly ascended to the village of Monte Lupo by night, and succeeded in surprising the outlaws. A fierce encounter ensued, during which the guards succeeded in shooting the ringleader Conti and four of his companions. Some twenty prisoners were taken, all of whom were recognized as desperate thieves, including the Syndic, who was alleged to have profited considerably by the depredations of the villagers, and to have given them his countenance and protection. The Minister of the Interior had, on hearing of this, issued an order that the village should be destroyed by explosives, and this had been done after the household effects of the whole place had been heaped up and burned.

"The Carbineers discovered a large quantity of stolen property hidden in the ancient fortress," the paragraph continues; "but what was strangest of all was a chamber wherein was an open grave. In this horrible place, one of the ancient dungeons of the castle, was a coffin containing the body of a victim apparently awaiting burial in quicklime. At first the guards were horrified; but their horror was turned to laughter when they found that the supposed body was in reality only a wax-faced dummy, and that the whole scene was cunningly arranged to terrify the victims from whom the thieves endeavored to extort money."

The explanation of the open grave was humorous enough, but there is at this moment when I write a terrible picture posted on the notice-board of the Communal Palace of Lucca; it is a gruesome picture of the notorious brigand Conti and his four companions whose bodies were, after death, stuck up against a wall and photographed, by order of the Italian Government, so that the public should know that the scoundrels were really dead, and likewise to warn all other outlaws of the fate awaiting them. As for my affable friend the Syndic, he is at present on the island of Elba, serving a sentence of ten years' imprisonment.

I revisited Monte Lupo, with some English friends a few days ago. The dynamite of the corps of Engineers has done its work well, for there is scarcely one stone standing upon another.

GIRLS' POSITION IN KOREA.

When a girl is born in Korea she is not even dignified by a name. Several names are written on slips of paper and placed in an urn before some favorite deity, and when it is necessary her godfather selects one without seeing it, and she is known by it until she reaches womanhood among the members of her own family. Strangers designate her as the wife, mother, sister or daughter of such a man. This is not merely the result of a custom. The laws are strict in this matter, and hold a woman of little more consequence than a domestic animal. In the higher classes of society the girls are separated from the boys of the family at the age of 7 years. They occupy the apartments of women, and are forbidden to communicate with anyone outside.

A doctor with cavalry experience has invented a patent galloping hospital, drawn by two horses, and capable of accommodating six wounded.

A TRUE HERO.

Sometimes it required more energy to do a little thing all than to do some great thing in pany with others. Thus a may be a hero on the field of tle, but lack the courage to stand alone on a platform and make speech.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, in his on "Heroism," says that genuine ism is persistence. As an illustration he tells how his little son on his way to school had to go house where lived a French child. The child heard the family t their native language, which he not understand, and that made have a sort of superstitious t them. So Mr. Emerson used to to and from school with the little low key seized the end, pulled it out, and gave a fine imitation of the act. Then, of course, some of us had kodaks, and after we had taken several pictures another little imp picked up a little block of wood which lay upon the ground, and with it took several snapshots at us. A third mischievous simian, a vain mother monkey, who deserted her infant for the purpose, grabbed from my shoulders a red scarf, and in a few flying leaps carried it to a lofty minaret. There she put it on, and seemed to be quite proud of her looks. But she was not allowed to keep her prize. In about three minutes, at least 40 monkeys had bit a piece of my precious scarf. Then our native guide informed me that the monkeys were very fond of scarfs, and that they captured a great many on the stone "ghats" near the temple while their owners were bathing in the river.

SOME MOST EXTRAORDINARY FOREWARNINGS.

Flies, Crabs and Guerillas Have Proved More Valuable Than Howitzers.

One of the most remarkable festivals in the world is that held annually at midsummer in the city of San Domingo in the West Indies, when every inhabitant deems it incumbent upon him to decorate his house with the shells—often richly gilt and garlanded—of the so abundant in the neighbourhood. The women-folk also throng the streets, attired in their best clothes, and wearing in their hair gold and silver reproductions of the ungainly creatures; while, to crown all, a huge specimen used, until quite recently, to be led captive through the principal thoroughfares, the inhabitants saluting it as it passed with respectful and reverential gravity. The origin of this extraordinary custom is said to have been the good service once rendered to the citizens by the progenitors of the crabs in question, in scaring away a body of English cavalry, the clattering of their claws and shells being mistaken for the sound made by Spanish cavalry.

A somewhat similar story is also told concerning the gigantic tropical fireflies which swarm in the forests and cane-brakes of most of the larger West Indian islands. A body of buccanniers, headed by the notorious Thomas Cavendish, were contemplating a descent upon the coast-towns of Hayti, and had actually put off in their boats for that purpose. As they approached the land, however, rowing with muffled oars, they were greatly surprised to see an infinite number of moving lights in the woods which fringed the bayou up which they had to proceed, and concluding that the Spaniards knew of their approach, they put about, and regained their ships without

ATTEMPTING TO LAND.

Ostriches, when seen at a distance, look exactly like irregular cavalry scouting in open order. It was this peculiarity in their appearance which saved an entire British force from annihilation during the Boer War of 1881. The Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers were advancing in column across the veldt, near where the town of Durban now stands, when a flock of these ungainly birds was descried in the distance, moving in and out among a cluster of kopjes on our right front, and apparently bent on outflanking us. "A Boer cavalry patrol!" cried everyone simultaneously; and the regiment promptly proceeded to form laager. A little later the true nature of the supposed "cavalry patrol" was

CONTROLLING NITER IN SYRUP MAKING.

The niter or malate of lime nuisance is with us to stay, but it is now well under control where a reversible current evaporator is used. By having the evaporating pan constructed with partitions extending lengthwise instead of crosswise and with a syringe faucet on both sides at the back end, then by changing the regulator gate from side to side and thus changing the current or flow of sap every few hours and by so doing bring the syruping off first on one side and then on the other, no niter will become burned on the bottom of the evaporator. It will come out with the syrup as a precipitate and can be entirely removed by the use of a thick felt filter. The filtering must be done while the syrup is boiling hot and in order to have all the niter form in a precipitate, it is necessary to bring the syrup to 279 degrees F. If it is filtered before that degree is reached much of the niter will still be in solution and appear in the syrup if boiled afterward to standard weight and in the sugar if sugared off. If syrup is boiled to 11 lbs. weight and then "settled" without filtering, it usually has a cloudy appearance, and if put up for market in cans or bottles will deposit a sediment in the bottom after a while.

We now have a greater nuisance than has ever struck the maple sugar industry, previous to two years ago, and one that no way of controlling has yet been found, and that is the forest worm. Several of the finest sugar orchards in the state were completely stripped of their foliage and we are told by the entomologist that "two or at most three such complete stripplings will kill the trees." Nothing but natural causes can be expected to destroy these destroyers.

MONEY IN GOOSE FARMING.

The breeding and growing of geese on a large scale for market and egg purposes could undoubtedly be made profitable if handled in a practical manner. It would be necessary to have a farm range with plenty of pasture and sufficient water for the birds. It would not be necessary to have a small lake, as spring water or pond water is sufficient. Geese as a rule do not require much grain, as the young feed almost entirely on pasture.

Our best goslings are grown to about five months of age with less than one peck of grain each. After that age, if good weights are desired, furnish them with grain food. The mature or breeding stock should be fed very lightly during the spring and summer months as over-fattened specimens are usually entirely worthless as breeders. The leading varieties for both market and egg purposes are the Toulouse, Embden, African, white and brown Chinese.

As a general purpose goose the Toulouse leads all other varieties; the Embdens are about the same size as Toulouse, but much poorer layers. The Chinese are a smaller goose, but the best layers of any variety. We have produced large numbers of young Toulouse at six months of age, weighing on the average of thirty-two to thirty-five pounds per pair and Chinese averaging at six months of age, when in good flesh, twenty-four to twenty-eight pounds per pair.

To obtain the best results in hatching it is necessary to use common hens broken, put the beak back and was and wind with clot? and the fast.

EVERGREEN TREES FOR THE FARM.

Evergreen trees are among the best for planting on the farm, for ornament or shelter. A windbreak on the west edge of the farm or near the farm buildings should be of mixed evergreen and deciduous trees, rather than a solid evergreen hedge. We want to break the force of the winter winds and yet not keep out the summer breezes. My shelter belt was started 10 years ago and is eight or 10 rods west of buildings. The evergreen trees are now 10 to 15 ft. high and other trees 10 to 20 ft. It is composed of Scotch and white pines, Norway spruce, elm, Norway maple, mulberries of two or three varieties, basswood and oak, catalpa and a few other kinds. It takes up a space 10 to 15 ft. wide. Among the trees and east of them are planted shrubs of many kinds, also herbaceous flowering plants and some annuals.

These trees were all small when planted and were set thick, so that many have been taken up and set elsewhere, and now this windbreak is really an ornamental border as well as nursery for small trees and shrubs. The evergreens are the main feature and as yet nothing has been allowed to crowd them, the shrubs and trees being removed or trimmed so as not to touch the evergreens long at a time. Two or three years ago I set 25 evergreens, bought of a nursery, among these larger trees. These were only 8 to 12 in. high, but are now 2 to 3 ft. high and will be gradually removed and some used for Christmas trees. This shelter belt and border is interesting the whole year, and we do not feel the winter winds around house and barn nearly so much as five years ago. Evergreens are also nice to plant around edges of lawn, singly or in groups, but too many should not be used near the house and they should not be trimmed up from the ground, but allowed to grow naturally.

DRINKING WATER ON THE FARM.

Our drinking waters too often furnish the ingredients which are the predisposing cause of disease. These ingredients may be either mineral or organic substances. Mineral matters, in the form of alkaline salts, or the chlorine, all, if sufficiently abundant have an irritating effect which, in time, produces symptoms of poisoning, as is manifested by colic, indigestion, headaches, diarrhea, etc. These salts often accumulate and bring about premature old age. In some districts in which the water is heavily charged with lime salts a remarkable shortening of life is noted—few people living to a real old age. This is believed, on good grounds, to be due to the abundance of the mineral elements in the water. As organic matter we have decaying vegetable matter and other organic matters of many kinds.

In cities the causes of contamination are on every side, and in not a few instances is this true upon the farm.

Our farm wells—so often situated in the stable or barnyard, near out-houses, or in the vicinity of places where slops are thrown from the back door—too often furnish a water unfit for drinking purposes, which might have been different if some forethought had been taken in regard to their location.

everyone simultaneously; and the lancer. A little later the true nature of the supposed "cavalry patrol" was discovered; but simultaneously the main Boer army, which had been lying concealed in the bed of a dry spruit about a thousand yards ahead, opened fire, imagining, of course, that we had somehow been warned of the "trap which they had prepared for us. As it happened, the Boers were in overwhelming strength, and but for the lucky—and, under the circumstances, quite pardonable—mistake, the Inniskillings would almost certainly have been cut to pieces. As it was, they had to stand a siege of many weary weeks, and were only rescued at last, in the very nick of time, by reinforcements sent round by sea.

FROM CAPE TOWN.

The Dutchmen were then, of course, not nearly so strong numerically as they are at present, but their method of fighting seems to have been much the same. Their skill in taking advantage of every bit of cover is described as marvellous, and came as a revelation, to our officers and men; as did also their wonderfully accurate shooting. Indeed, just at first the Irish lads could not believe it possible that their being struck so often, and nearly always in a vital part, was due to anything but a series of unlucky accidents. After the first day or two of the siege, however, they learned better, and grew very shy of showing themselves within view of the Boer sharpshooters.

Every reader of this article has doubtless recalled for himself the huckneyed story of the geese that saved Rome, but comparatively few probably are aware that the city of Quebec was warned in a similar manner of the approach of an enemy by the opportune cackling of the same noisy birds. The incident occurred in 1775, when the town was being besieged by the American provincials, under Montgomery, and the details are still preserved in the municipal archives.

Indeed, these stories of besieged towns warned by birds of the approach of an enemy crop up again and again and are no doubt for the most part true. Every species of fowl—and especially every species of waterfowl—is able to detect the approach of strange footsteps when yet very far off, and invariably gives noisy notice, —a trait in their character well known to all park poachers. A carefully-planned Moorish attack against Valladolid in Spain, failed for this reason; and a portion of the Castle of Gurre, in Sweden, built by Valdemar I. in commemoration of a parallel incident, is called the Goose Tower to this very day. During the American Civil War, too, the screeching of a flock of guinea-fowl effectually warned the inhabitants of the little Mississippi town of Greenville of the approach of Quantrell's.

TERRIBLE GUERILLAS.

Alva, the marvellous Spanish governor of the Netherlands, concerning whom it was said that in a long life of warfare he was never beaten or surprised, failed, nevertheless, to detect the importance attaching to the antics of a number of storks which were wading in the water in front of the beleaguered city of Maestricht.
The long-legged bipeds proved conclusively to the burghers that a lagoon, which stretched between them and the Spanish general's camp, was fordable, and, sailing forth in the dead of night they succeeded in inflicting enormous damage on the besiegers.

less as breeders. The leading varieties for both market and egg purposes are the Toulouse, Embden, African, white and brown Chinese.

As a general purpose goose, the Toulouse leads all other varieties; the Emdens are about the same size as Toulouse, but much poorer layers.
The Chinese are a smaller goose, but the best layers of any variety. We have produced large numbers of young Toulouse at six months of age, weighing on the average of thirty-two to thirty-five pounds per pair and Chinese averaging at six months of age, when in good flesh, twenty-four to twenty-eight pounds per pair.

To obtain the best results in hatching it is necessary to use common hens to hatch and care for the young goslings. After the goslings are eight weeks old they may be safely turned in the fields with the old geese. The young goslings after a week old would have free access to plenty of fresh, green grass, when no grain food will be required. The young goslings are very rapid growers, and at eight weeks old will be over one-half grown if properly cared for.

Considerable revenue may be obtained from the feathers by picking the mature specimens some four or five times during the spring and summer months, and early goslings may also be picked during the latter part of August and again in October, provided they are not being fattened for market. It would not be necessary to secure the best farming land for geese raising; on the other hand, geese would thrive much better in low, marshy land which had not been under-drained. If properly handled there is no reason why this industry should not prove a financial success.

CARE OF THE APPLE ORCHARD.

Keep the ground stirred about the trees by using the garden rake after rains heavy enough to pack the ground. This will conserve the moisture and is better than any mulch that can be applied, and the trees will take deeper root. If weeds or trash of any kind have accumulated about the trees, clear away or cover up in the fall with soil, making a little mound to prevent a harbor for mice. Remove it in the spring.

There are several reasons why the young orchard should be planted to corn. The cultivation of corn is the proper cultivation for the orchard.
The corn helps shelter the trees from the wind. The stalks help lodge and retain the snow, making winter protection, and if the corn is poorly husked there will be plenty of food for the rabbits. Crop to corn until the orchard is fruiting well, then seed to clover.

Spray with kerosene emulsion just before the buds open, or apply whitewash with brush to the body. A solution made thin and strained can be applied with a spray pump to the tops.
This will destroy many of the enemies of fruit and fruit trees that find a breeding place and winter harbor on the trees.

Bruises from any cause that dead-ens the bark make an ideal spot for the propagation of the borer. In the dead bark is where the egg is deposited and by nature's law is brought into life and his work of destruction is commenced and done. Carry a roll of grafting wax and a roll of old colton and twine to do up any bruise or break of bark as soon as done, before the wood or bark becomes dried, and it will grow fast again, but if left until the sap in the wood and bark becomes dried you will have a scar that will take two or three years to grow over and if the borer gets a lodgment there it may be a lasting blemish. It's better not to break or bruise the trees, but accidents will occur, and the remedy should be applied to save the blemish. Wax a bruise, if the bark is not broken: if matter we have decaying vegetable matter and other organic matter of many kinds.

In cities the courses of contamination are on every side, and in not a few instances is this true upon the farm.

Our farm wells—so often situated in the stable or barnyard, near outhouses, or in the vicinity of places where slops are thrown from the back door—too often furnish a water unfit for drinking purposes, which might have been different if some forethought had been taken in regard to their location.

WONDERFUL LAKE.

Filled With Boiling Acids That Eat Boats
to Pieces.

A strange lake exists in the centre of Sulphur Island, off New Zealand.
It is 50 acres in extent, about 12 feet in depth and 15 feet above the level of the sea. The most remarkable characteristic of this lake, is that the water contains vast quantities of hydrochloric and sulphuric acids, hissing and bubbling at a temperature of 110 degrees Fahrenheit. The dark green-colored water looks particularly uninviting. Dense clouds of sulphuric fumes constantly roll off this boiling caldron, and care has to be exercised in approaching this lake to avoid the risk of suffocation. On the opposite side of the lake may be seen the tremendous blow-holes, which, when in full blast, present an awe-inspiring sight. The roar of the steam as it rushes forth into the air is deafening and often huge boulders and stones are hurled out to a height of several hundred feet by the various internal forces of nature. A boat can be launched on the lake, and, if proper care be observed, the very edges of the blow-holes may be safely explored.
Some idea of the strength of the acid-saturated water of this lake may be gathered from the fact that a boat almost dropped to pieces after all the passengers had been landed, as the rivets had corroded under the influence of the acids.

A TRUE TALE.

Ah-h-h, shivered the old man as he entered the cabin of the ferry which was just leaving Windsor for Detroit.
Then he sat down on the bench which runs the length of the cabin, on the innermost side. This is the warmest side, said he. This is the side for an old man on a cold day.

Here he looked around him. Another old man whose hair was white sat next to him. The latter replied:

So it is, so it is.

I suppose you think you are an old man, said the first one. You think you are getting on in years. Perhaps you might make a guess on my age, now. How old do you think I am?

Well, mused No. 2 as he looked the other over carefully, well, I should say you are nearly 75.

Huh! ejaculated the other with just a tinge of scorn, and considerable dignity, straightening himself up at the same time, Well my boy, I am 80 years old next month.

Phew, the second old man whistled, as if he was greatly disappointed and crestfallen, you don't say so! Well, I'm just ten years behind you.

"You're a pretty active young fellow," said No. 1, seriously. You seem to get around very well. That's all right. Keep it up and some day you'll get to be an old man.

All armies are liable to night scares which at times almost amount to a panic. On one occasion a British regiment in India, marching over the ghauts on its return from manoeuvres at Chinchwad, was thrown into temporary confusion by the bolting of a couple of pack-oxen laden with cooking-pots.

SHRINKING GINGHAM.

In making up dresses of gingham, Madras, pique, etc., especially when domestic material is chosen, the goods should be shrunk before cutting. This may be done by dipping the fabric quickly in water, allowing it to remain long enough to wet it thoroughly, but by no means soaking it. Lift it from the water and drain without wringing; hang so that threads run straight, and shake from time to time until almost dry, then press carefully with a hot iron. The rapid drying thus induced will result in the desired shrinking. Heavy linens and fine French or silk ginghams do not require treatment of this kind, but these should be cut invariably according to the thread, otherwise they will be sure to hang unevenly after their first visit to the laundry. A very common source of dissatisfaction in the appearance of wash-dresses made in the materials above described is to be traced to the employment of a too fine machine-stitch, which often puckers a seam badly, especially if the material has not been shrunk previous to making. Even with exceedingly fine organs and a medium-sized stitch is preferable, especially for long seams such as occur in skirts. This is a defect in home dress-making that should be equally guarded against in the stitching of veiling, cloths, India silks, or silk ginghams. Even where stitching is employed as garniture a smoother effect will be gained by setting the machines so as to bring from eighteen to twenty-two stitches within the inch. In stitching up bias seams in gingham or other wash fabrics these will be best sustained by backing them with a narrow bias strip of the same material. Stayed in this way, there need be no fear of disease after laundering.

CARE OF HOUSE PLANTS.

Green plants and ferns in pits ought to have their leaves sponged every fortnight during the winter, and the best way of watering them is to plunge the pots for ten minutes into a bucket of water. Indian rubber plants, however, cannot stand it, and must be moderately watered, and the leaves sponged.

All plants that bloom in winter are delicate and chilly indoors. A draught destroys them at once, and they must not be put for a moment out in the air. A great many, and orchids among them, can have their blossoming lives indefinitely prolonged if a sheet of tissue-paper is twisted up into a sort of cornucopia, and put over them by way of nightcap at the close of the evening.

Azaleas, which are among the most ornamental of forced plants, require a great deal of water, but very little heat, and a breath of cold air is sudden death to them. A room in which there are many flowers will bear just a little syringing in a morning when the ornaments and books are all covered up. The tiny drops of water that fail do not injure carpets, draperies, or furniture, and the atmosphere is wonderfully moistened and refreshed. The same effect may be produced by standing a couple of pails of very hot water at the ends of the room, if it be a large one, so as to steam the air, and that cannot possibly do any harm.

SUGGESTIONS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Salt codfish has a great food value, and is one of the best sources of pint of water and poured boiling hot in one tablespoonful of gelatine will be soaked. Mix thoroughly, adding sugar if necessary and water to make it like thick cream. Add lemon juice if it seems too sweet. Freeze as usual, but not too hard to serve in glass cups; it should be like thick mush.

Doublet Sauce.—One quarter cup butter; one half cup cream; two cups of coffee sugar. Rub the butter to a cream, add the cream and sugar alternately and beat till light and frothy. Flavor with ginger or chocolate. This is a good pudding sauce, and quickly made.

Lemon Short Cake.—Make a rich pie crust; line jelly tins with it and bake. Fill with the mixture just before serving. Juice of two lemons, one cup sugar, one cup cream, a teaspoonful of lemon flavoring. Mix the lemon juice and sugar some hours before you add the cream and beat all thoroughly, then add the shells.

Date Cake.—Make any kind of rich white cake, bake it in layers and put together with this filling. Take one cup of the nicest dates, seed and chop them. Then beat the white of one egg very stiff, and beat it into half a cup of rich sweet cream. Stir it thick with powdered sugar and add the dates. Ice the top with white icing, and if you choose decorate it with large dates.

Raisin Pie.—One cup of seeded raisins, the seedless can be used; one cup of thick, sour cream, one egg and one cup of sugar, spices as for mince pie. Beat the eggs and sugar, add the cream and spice, a little flour, and the raisins, then stir well. Bake in two crusts.

WAR BRINGS PROSPERITY.

How the Seaport of Southampton Has Been Transformed.

Two months ago, a casual visitor strolling down Bernard street, Southampton, or any of the other principal thoroughfares, would have found little to attract his attention, says an English Exchange. Lazy dogs were lying undisturbed in the middle of the road, now and again somebody dawdled up or down the street, shop-keepers seemed startled if you went in and asked for anything, and the great marvel was that there should be any necessity for streets and shops at all.

Even the arrival of the boat-trains with the mails scarcely seemed to make any difference. There would be a faint flutter of excitement round the railway station, and presently a few porters would straggle on with luggage to the nearest hotel; and that was all.

But now all that is changed. Southampton to-day teems with busy life, and the population appears to be a good deal too large for the streets. All day and half the night the busy trams are laden with people. The pavements are crowded with men in scarlet, men in blue, men in khaki; officers, and privates, and tars, with their wives and sweethearts and friends and relations. The hotels are all full, even beds are scarcely to be had, and landladies are reaping a golden harvest.

Any one who had not visited Southampton for some time would have been surprised at the appearance of the town, crowded as it was with the officers and men of the Sixth Division.

MOMENTS OF DANGER

CRUCIAL SECONDS IN THE LIVES OF ENGINEERS.

Just What They Do, or Should Do, in Cases of Peril on the Rails—Few Have Been Found Wanting When the Emergency Came.

To the engineer belongs the most hazardous and at the same time the most responsible task of any of the men who run the train, and the passengers on one of the great fliers as they loll back in their seats reading the most recent work of fiction or gazing placidly forth at the scenery scarcely ever give a thought to the fact that ahead of them is a dust and oil begrimed man who, for the time being, literally carries their lives in the hollow of his sweaty hand. It is extraordinary how few cases there are where engineers have been found derelict in the moment of trial. There have been innumerable wrecks since railroads were first introduced into the country, but the record of the number of engineers who have failed when the crucial test came is infinitesimal.

When once danger appears in front, an engineer's duty is, first, to close the throttle; second, to apply the airbrakes; third, to reverse the engine—that is, to throw over the reversing lever, which enables the engine to run in the opposite direction from which it had been going; fourth, to reopen the throttle. To do these four acts calls for but a small fraction of time, but where wrecks result the danger is usually so imminent as frequently not to leave even sufficient interval to accomplish them, and often when the ruins have been cleared away the body of the faithful guardian has been discovered with his hand stiff in death on the throttle, reverse lever or brake, and bearing silent witness as to how far he had got toward the accomplishment of that duty which he had yielded his life to perform.

Many engineers are reckless and will take awful chances. At one time a certain driver was taking through a special train consisting of four empty freight cars and a caboose. The station master told him that the down train was a trifle late and due at the next station beyond, seven miles away, at 2:37 o'clock. Glancing at his watch, the engineer said he had nine minutes and decided to take the chance. He had to cross a bridge just beyond the town he was leaving, and midway across he began to increase his speed. As the engine struck ground again on the other side and they headed straight up the river's valley he threw her wide open and gave his engine every ounce of steam there was in the boiler. Three miles farther on, when running to the limit of his capacity, he struck the down train head on. Both engineers and firemen were killed outright, and the engines reduced to a condition that rendered them only fit for the scrap heaps.

Strange to say, no passengers or other members of either crew were killed outright or afterward died as the result of injuries received. Only the shoulders and head of the fireman of the special were ever found. He had been driven into the door of the fire box feet first, but had stuck at the shoulders. The white hot fire within had completely incinerated the rest of his body. To look at the door of a fire box such a casualty as that seems all but impossible, the opening looks so small. In reality, however, it is large enough, as any railroad man can tell you.

The watch of the engineer of the special when found was still running and was four minutes behind. It was to this error of his timepiece that the tragic death of himself and his three companions was due.

In daylight it is the habit of the engineer to follow with the eye the glistening track of rails over which he must travel. Should a rail be misplaced, it would break this line of light and betray itself to the watchful man in time to stop and save his train. This particular wreck, however, resulted from that curse and dread of all railroad runners—the wash-

A DIABETES CURE

Suffered With Diabetes and Bled for Over a Year—Was Advised to Take Dodd's Kidney Pills—"Saved From the Grave."

St. Thomas, Feb. 19.—Nowhere in Ontario are Dodd's Kidney Pills highly valued than in the neighborhood of St. Thomas. They are famous for having first given sufferers Bright's Disease and Diabetes a safe, for previous to the discovery of Dodd's Kidney Pills these cases were invariably fatal.

Michael Hallern, a farmer near St. Thomas, is one of those who fully appreciate the worth of Dodd's Kidney Pills. He has good reason. He was cured of Diabetes by the Pills he would be in his grave.

Diabetes is a local disease of the kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills are, therefore, the only medicine of the best use in the treatment of the disease. The kidneys are the organs affected, and Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only medicine that can take the kidneys with any beneficial effect.

There are moreover a number of other diseases which are caused by disorder of the kidneys and which Dodd's Kidney Pills by curing the kidneys order removes the cause of other troubles. Thus it is Dodd's Kidney Pills are the radical and permanent cure Dropsy, Heart Disease, Rheum Lumbago, Sciatica, Bladder and urinary Complaints, Female Disorder, unhealthy condition of the blood.

As for Diabetes the statement signed by Mr. Michael Hallern, of St. Thomas, and witnessed by Mr. Ostrander, of Dutton, will prove the claims made for Dodd's Kidney Pills are absolutely true. The statement reads:—

"I have been troubled for years with Diabetes. My back was in the worst kind of pain all the time urine was very dark and my condition was getting very serious. A friend of mine told me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I have now used one box and am already completely cured. My urine is at its natural color and my back is as strong as a board."

death to them. A room in which there are many flowers will bear just a little syringing in a morning when the ornaments and books are all covered up. The tiny drops of water that fall do not injure carpets, draperies, or furniture, and the atmosphere is wonderfully moistened and refreshed. The same effect may be produced by standing a couple of pails of very hot water at the ends of the room, if it be a large one, so as to steam the air, and that cannot possibly do any harm.

SUGGESTIONS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Salt codfish has a great food value, which causes it to be much sought after. It is almost as nutritive in its salted form as it is when fresh, though it loses a little of its digestibility. When it is scarce the dealer often substitutes a cheaper fish for the genuine cod. A way to test whether you are getting the real thing or not is to rub a bit of the fish between the thumb and finger. If it is cod the fibre will loosen and become waxy but will not go to pieces. Other fish will crumble readily between the finger.

A few drops of ammonia in the water in which you wash your cut glass—or your pressed glass, or any kind of glass at all, will make it look bright and sparkling. Deeply cut glass may require an occasional scrub with a scrub brush and soap. For cleaning silver take equal parts of ammonia and alcohol and enough whitening to make it like cream. Apply with a brush if the article is chased, repousse silver, and set aside to dry. When dry it will be ready to polish, which may be done with a dry flannel or a chamois.

It is not extravagant to use eggs freely, both on the table and in breakfast breads, cakes and custards. One pound of eggs used as food will average about the same in value as one pound of the very best quality of butcher's meat. Eggs also contain more phosphorus than the average of other foods. There is also a specially valuable form of sulphur and iron in eggs.

It is said that there is no taste or scent in cottonseed in cottolene if the cottolene is fresh. Just as soon as it is a little stale the objectionable taste is observable. It is the cottolene—a mixture of refined cottonseed oil and clarified beef fat. The difficulty of getting it perfectly fresh is the chief objection to its use.

COMFORT AND CLUMSINESS.

The woman who believes that warmth of body is only secured by a multiplicity of garments will have clumsy hips, an awkward waist line, and a general appearance of being bundled up. When union underwear was universally adopted much of the clumsy look was dissipated, and when petticoats were reduced in number another step was taken toward beauty of form. Unfortunately, we are not all progressive, and winter yet means to us the heavy garments which are disfiguring.

Old age creeps in when you begin to find thin foot wear uncomfortable and drift to roomy old shoes; when you prefer the ease of loose wrappers to the snugness of a pretty house gown; when a becoming coiffure seems oppressive.

You must keep up active habits, or you are lost. Each year after the 40th birthday you must take a little more care of yourself, increase the codding, but never sink into slipshod ways. You must have an interest of some kind on side of your routine work.

their wives and sweethearts and friends and relations. The hotels are all full, even beds are scarcely to be had, and landladies are reaping a golden harvest.

Any one who had not visited Southampton for some time would have been surprised at the appearance of the town, crowded as it was with the officers and men of the Sixth Division.

Every one seemed to be buying kit or keepsakes. The shops have risen to the occasion. Here you can see a huge placard reading, "Officers' outfits at a moment's notice," and here the announcement, "Charming souvenirs." Indeed, from the amount of shopping going on you would think that every one had forgotten what they wanted till they got to Southampton.

Nightly outside the town's three theatres there are long queues of people waiting for admission, and scores ultimately get turned away. In fact, never before has Southampton been so busy or so prosperous. "It is an ill wind that blows nobody good," and the war is realizing in some degree Southampton's cherished dream of becoming a second Liverpool.

It is not unusual for the bride who is going away for an extended trip, or who expects to make her home in a distant city, to give photographs to the most intimate of her friends before leaving them.

One such bride, who is given to doing things unique and original, determined to frame the pictures thus given, and to do so in an appropriate manner.

There were to be mounted under glass in the manner familiar to all, known as passepartout, but instead of the usual mat of linen or cardboard, she used a material which was especially appropriate and one which made frame as well as picture worthy of being preserved among the family heirlooms.

The picture which she gave her mother had a mat of the white satin, which had been used for her wedding dress, and across one corner was a bit of lace with which the dress was trimmed.

To a sister she gave a picture also mounted in the white satin, but with a design of orange blossoms embroidered upon it; while the mount for the one given her maid of honor was of the white satin embroidered with a graceful spray of bride roses.

Friends less near received pictures mounted with the goods which had gone to make up the different gowns of her trousseau. The mount made from the material of her "going-away gown," had forget-me-nots embroidered in small scattered sprays, while some of the silks and figured goods were made up plain, being sufficiently decorative in themselves.

In each case the mounted picture was bound to the glass with a narrow strip of soft leather in a shade to correspond with the color of the mount. Upon the back of each was plainly written the name and date of the wedding.

It is needless to state that the gifts were prized as the pictures alone never could have been, and it is safe to predict that other brides will follow the graceful fashion.

all but impossible, the opening looks so small. In reality, however, it is large enough, as any railroad man can tell you.

The watch of the engineer of the special when found was still running and was four minutes behind. It was to this error of his timepiece that the tragic death of himself and his three companions was due.

In daylight it is the habit of the engineer to follow with the eye the glistening track of rails over which he must travel. Should a rail be misplaced, it would break this line of light and betray itself to the watchful man in time to stop and save his train. This particular wreck, however, resulted from that curse and dread of all railroad runners—the washout. The culvert which caused it was a short one, its width being hardly greater than the combined length of engine and tender. The masonry had been carried away; but, the fishplates and spikes holding firm, the rails still crossed the gully. This held the rail line of light true and in consequence the engineer was well up to the danger before he realized it. He was able to stop the train, but to do so had to go into the ditch himself, although fortunately he did not lose his life.

He was washed out of his cab window by the flood. His jumper catching over a stone, the train newsboy fortunately found him in time to save him from death by drowning. So close a thing was it that when the train came to a full stop the front wheels of the forward truck of the baggage car were hanging over the opening made by the washout. No one was injured save the engineer, who escaped with a couple of broken ribs and a dislocated shoulder. He completely recovered, however, and is one of the most trusted engineers on that particular line to this city.

A rather amusing thing occurred in connection with this wreck. There was little coal in the tender, what was left being in the rear end, and the fireman had gone back to shovel it forward. The impetus of the engine caused it to jump clear across the gully and stick its nose in the opposite bank. The rear part, being the heavier, dropped first, carrying the forward part of the tender with it, causing tender and engine to shut up like a jackknife. The fireman was tossed clean over the engine and alighted uninjured on the track beyond the washout.

He was a lanky, six foot Irishman, with carrot hair and the brogue still strong upon him. In telling of his experience afterward he said:

"Sure, it was a quare expyrience there was. I one minit stooping wid me shovel over the coal bape and the next minit there was I and me shovel and the coal all flying troo de air, and each trying to see who would get there first. Glory be that I was not hurt at all, at all. It's a brave man is Moike (the engineer), fine, big, brave man, sor. The last thing he said was— What do you think it was, sor, and him expecting to die the next minit, at that, sor? Widout turning his head he yells out to me, 'Jump, you red-headed scoundrel!' he yells, and while I didn't have no time to do as he toold me, I take it very kindly that he thought of me as he did." The tears stood in the honest fellow's eyes as he told the story. —New York Tribune.

any clergyman ever uttered, and they should receive the earnest attention of all who read them.

Thou and I, and Park, July 22, 1839.
The Arnold Chemical Co.

Dear Sirs,—At the beginning of this month my constitution was so much run down that I had to get leave of absence from my congregation for four months. I left New York on the 10th inst., and while in Toronto I saw Dr. Arnold's English Pills advertised in the News and bought a box of them. When I commenced taking them my condition was such that I could not sleep and my appetite was very poor, but before I had finished the box I could sleep well and enjoy a good meal, and now I feel like a new man. In the first place I feel indebted to the Toronto News for putting me on the right track, and in the second place I think Dr. Arnold's English Pills the best medicine I ever took.

Enclosed please find two dollars for which you will please send me three boxes of your pills to the address below,

Yours most respectfully,

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber
Feb. 5th, 1900

Council met in regular session on Tuesday evening last, the Mayor presiding. Members present were Councillors R. Lowry, Leonard, Carson, Lapum and others.

The minutes of the last session read and confirmed.

A communication from Walter McWhorter and Shakespeare reader tendered his services for a patriotic concert held in Napanee any time in the near future. He asked no fee except his expenses. The communication was filed.

The report of the Fin. Com. was read. They recommended that the sum of $400 due from the sewer laid from Court House, and $247 from Grand side walk, a total of $647, and an appropriation of $400 be made to the Street to enable them to carry on business the rest of the term. They also recommended that the Printing Com. be an appropriation as soon as the amount can be ascertained.

Also that the report of the Fin. presented at the last regular session be printed. The report was received and adopted.

The report of Poor and Sanitary recommended that Mrs. Geo. Richardson be granted $20 for the care Geo. Richardson, recently injured on the market, and that all claims for damages against town be relinquished. Report was read and adopted.

Coun. Lapum asked that the Com. be authorized to purchase a plow for use with the street grader referred to Street Com. with power to The price for such a plow will be in neighborhood of $25 or $30 and is especially for road work.

There was some discussion in relation to moving the electric light from corner at Salem. Coun. Lapum informed the council that the citizens in that neighborhood had told him they would be satisfied if the cost of maintaining the was spent on the road and side Coun. Leonard asked that if it was decided to move the light to have it placed at corner of Robinson and Mill streets. question was finally left in the hands of the Fire, Water and Light Com. to decide.

An account from the Municipal Water and Electric Light Co's, account of $339.25 was referred to the Fire, and Light Com. to report.

The treasurer was granted a voucher for $8.50.

IN THE WRONG BAY.

No Wonder the Captain Ran His Ship Ashore.

The man who has "been 30 years the wharfs" tells some queer old stories sometimes. In the haunts where Philadelphia's mariners most do frequent is to be found with some yarn and tortuous Delaware and its tributaries. Some of the anecdotes have in them sense and logic, for the narrator is known as the best informed marine historian in this part of the world.

This sea prophet, however, has been famous by his delineation of the misadventures of captains who have sailed into waters. He is evidently sincere in telling, and the positive manner characterizes the latter often star genuine a yarn which might well be Baron Munchausen or Sir John Manners to the blush.

"You have all heard," began the year wharf stroller to an admiring of the shipping fraternity, "how I have tain down east skipper negotiated charter here to load coal for Omaha how the steamboat Major Reybold loose from her moorings one night made her regular trip to Milford at turn, including 19 stops, without mishap, although there was no board. She had been there so often knew the way, I suppose. This is, however, an experience I have on this river.

"Years ago I was a reporter for Maritime Exchange. I used to go rowboat and go down the river for business. One day I got as far as Chester and found the Delaware and I wired the office and asked

Among the officers appointed for Lord Strathcona's Horse—Canadian volunteers—now on the move for the South African war is Inspector Francis Lennox Cartwright, a son of Sir Richard. He has been, for the past three years, an officer in the North West Mounted Police, and is not 26 years of age. Sir Richard has now two sons in the ranks of the Canadian contingents.

In the House of Commons last week Mr. N. S. Davin wished to know why Supt. Perry, of the N. W. Mounted Police was not accepted when he volunteered to go to S. Africa. Premier, Sir Wilfred Laurier, replied that his services could not be spared as the Government could not well strip the Mounted Police force of one of its very best officers. The officer referred to is Mr. Perry, a leading officer in the Mounted Police, a position he has well filled since January 1882. He is a son of the late Wm. H. Perry, of Violet and a brother of our townsman J. Rudd Perry, C. E.

Farewell Presentation.

On Thursday afternoon of last week, the Ladies' Aid, of the Western Methodist Church, tendered Mrs. J. Harmer a farewell tea and at the close a very complimentary address was read by Mr. M. S. Madole, and a purse of money was presented by Mrs. F. Lane on behalf of her former associates. The address concluded with the words, "Though your place may be vacant in the Sabbath school, the social means of grace, the Ladies' Aid and the Missionary Society you will have left behind a remembrance of your loving deed; especially has the care of an aged mother been a lesson to us, which will not be forgotten." Mrs. Harmer will soon leave for Paseo, Washington Territory, where she will reside with her son. She has been a member of the W. M. C. here for twenty years and an earnest worker in all the branches of the church.

The Relief of Ladysmith.

The bells were rung in town on Wednesday last; the school children were given a half holiday; and various flags, notably the union-jack were much in evidence. The "boys" had a march down Dundas street, with rifles, shot guns, tin pans, pails and any old thing that would help to make a charivari for Kruger. At the same time there was a feeling of sadness caused by the fate of some of the Canadian contingent. Truly the boys had their wish to be at the front, and in the thick of the fight, as a return 19 killed and 61 wounded abundantly proves. A congregation was hurriedly got together at S. Mary Magdalene's church, and a Te Deum was said and a short form of thanksgiving was rendered.

OBITUARY.

HENRY B. ALLISON.

Henry B. Allison, Esq., one of the oldest and most respected residents of Richmond township, passed away on Thursday last after a lingering illness. Deceased was for fifty-two years without food of any sort and was able to sip but a little water. The doctors who attended him say they never heard of a parallel case. He was in his eighty-first year, and was a native of Snyiasburgh, Prince Edward county, and is a cousin of the Allisons of Adolphustown. He was married 57 years ago to Miss Laura Amos Schermerhorn, of Richmond. For over fifty years Mr. and Mrs. Allison have resided on a part of the old Schermerhorn homestead, where they have raised and educated their family. They have three sons living:—Irvine, resides near Sharps Corners, Richmond; John, who resides on the farm adjoining the homestead; Henry, who resides at Picton. The daughters are Sarah, Mrs. Henderson, residing in Napanee and Orilia; Mrs. Alcombrack at Hamburg, Benjamin Allison, Esq., of Tyendinaga, is his only surviving brother. The late David Allison, who died in Napanee some months ago, was also a brother. The funeral took place on Sunday to the Eastern Cemetery vault, Napanee and was attended by a large number of friends and relatives.

As has been announced before, the next lecture of the Collegiate course will be given on Thursday evening, March 8th. Prof. MacCallum, of Toronto University, will speak on "Nerve Cells," upon which subject he has spent several years of careful investigation. Dr. MacCallum was mainly instrumental in having the British Association for the advancement of science meet in Toronto three years ago, and to him was given the direction of researches in this department of physiology. He is now regarded, both in Europe and America as an authority in this science. But recently, however, has the public been favored with the results of his work. This lecture will be the same, which was delivered with such marked success in Toronto some two months ago, and ought to attract those in Napanee who are anyway interested in the progress of thought. The Professor is a pleasing lecturer, who does not fail to inspire by his earnestness and originality.

education who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will and does with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of; whose intellect is a clear, cold, logic engine, with all its parts of equal strength and in smooth working order, ready, like a steam engine, to be turned to any kind of work, and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; whose mind is stored with a knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations and who, no stunted ascet-ic, is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come to heel by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or of art, to hate all vileness and to respect others as himself.—Huxley.
